PINE MOUNTAIN TRAIL STATE PARK: Highland Section

About Pine Mountain Trail State Park

To promote, construct, and manage a continuous hiking trail, with related spur, connector, and access trails, to be called the Pine Mountain Trail, and to conserve the natural environment of the Trail and its adjacent lands. The Trail shall run from the Breaks Interstate Park to Cumberland Gap National Historical Park, along the Pine Mountain ridge over the summits and through the scenic points of interest, so as to render the mountain accessible, principally for primitive camping, backpacking, and hiking. The Trail shall be a means for showcasing the wild highlands and conserving the natural and cultural heritage of Appalachia for future generations.

Pine Mountain offers a wide array of recreational opportunities. We encourage you to head out on the trail and experience the beauty of Pine Mountain for yourself.

Pine Mountain represents one of the last great contiguous stretches of unfragmented forest in Kentucky. While other parts of the region have been developed, strip-mined or heavily logged, Pine Mountain remains relatively untouched. Positioned at the western edge of the Appalachian Mountains, the mountain offers commanding views of Virginia, Kentucky, West Virginia and Tennessee. If ever there was a hope of preserving an ecological legacy for future generations of Kentuckians, this is it. The mountain has remained a refuge in the face of increasing human intrusion, mainly because it is a rugged, nearly roadless mountain that is guarded by jutting sandstone cliffs, tangled rhododendron thickets and large, pre-historic land slides laden with car-sized boulders. Even when deer and turkey were driven out of most of the region, Pine Mountain remained a refuge for wildlife native to the area.

Today the mountain serves as the travel corridor for black bear re-entering the state from Virginia and Tennessee. It provides habitat for the newly restored elk, and is the home of many Kentucky species that are restricted to Pine Mountain (i.e. rose pogonia, frostweed and the largest known population of yellow wild indigo in the Commonwealth). Breached by only six roads in 110 miles, the mountain represents a significant unprotected wilderness area.

TRAIL REGULATIONS

Trail users assume all risks in the natural areas. Be prepared. Help preserve the park's natural resources. The following activities are prohibited:

- Hiking after dark

For Your Safety:

Do not hike alone.
Wear proper clothing and footwear.
Take a park map.

About the Highland Section

This portion of the Pine Mountain Trail covers the highest elevations on Pine Mountain, reaching over 3200ft. at Mayking Knob. The northeast end is known for its bogs (one at the Old Meade Homeplace and another at Indian Grave Gap). The bogs are natural wetlands in the flat head-waters of streams on the mountain. They typically harbor aquatic wildflowers and mosses, and remain open without human intervention. To the center of the section, hikers will encounter old growth woodlands and Mayking Knob with limited views into Kentucky. The southwest portion of this section is known for its many incredible cliff-line views and rock formations including Box Rock, Mars Rock, High Rock, Bad Branch Gorge, the Lemon Squeezer, and Eagle Arch. Hikers will encounter different blaze marks on the trail. Pine Mountain Trail is denoted with yellow blaze marks, while Kentucky State Nature Preserves and Nature Conservancy lands are denoted with orange blaze marks. US Forest Service boundaries are denoted with red blaze marks.

Hiking Time and Distance

Allow to average 2-3 miles per hour on this section, as there many up and downs along the sawtooth-type ridgeline. In total the trail extends 14.7 miles and is between US-23 and US-119.

Precautions

There are many side roads which can easily be mistaken for the trail route. Carefully observe the yellow blazes and do not go more than 400 yards if you have not seen one. Camping should be avoided at Mullins Pond due to the road access. Black bears are common on this section, so care should be taken to avoid cooking at the tent site and all foods and other scented items should be bear bagged. Is in any back-woods setting, snakes and yellow-jackets are common. Pay attention to your footing around cliff areas, especially during wet or icy weather. The sandstone becomes very slick.
