Definition of Divisions:

Point & Shoot Digital – If you use a compact hand held camera that would not be used by a professional photographer.

Intermediate Digital - If you use a SLR type or other type of digital camera that is typically used by professional photographers, but you are not confident with your abilities to use your camera (example: I don't know how to take pictures except in automatic mode, or I just bought my camera a month ago & I'm not familiar with it yet)

Master Digital– If you use a SLR type or other type of digital camera that is typically used by professional photographers. Any photographer who makes his/her own principal income from photography, or has profited from the sale of their photography. In addition, any photographers who by their own judgment feels that their level of expertise give them an unfair advantage over the Intermediate division.
